Kingston bakery up for grabs in essay contest

The Enemark family (daughter Victoria photographed here) is getting out of the bakery business for a good essay. / ENEMARK

Bake off! A bakery owner has a novel way for "selling" her business.

Want to win a Massachusetts bakeshop? Get your typewriter out.

Maria Enemark, the 60-year-old owner of Sweets Coffee, Cakes and Treats in Kingston, is offering her five-year-old bakery to the winner of a 250-word essay contest after deciding to retire. She feared selling the business would leave a new owner saddled with too much debt.

"I have such good customers that I love and I'd hate to close," Enemark said.

The bakery is located in a renovated two-story house on a busy commercial strip. The winner gets the building, the appliances and $15,000 in start-up costs, all free of debt.

Enemark expects at least 4,000 entries. With a $150 entry fee, she could clear more than $585,000 after paying the cash grant.

The business is valued at approximately $575,000.

Enemark was, she says, "a housewife with a dream, some good recipes, and a little bit of money" when she started the shop. She hopes to pass it on to someone with a good background in baking who maybe doesn't have enough money to start his own shop.

"The next person has everything clean. No mortgage, no rent, no nothing," Enemark said.

The shop makes cakes and cupcakes, but also does brisk trade selling egg sandwiches.

Enemark's daughter, Stephanie, wants the next owner to dream big.

"It's a great opportunity. A lot of people have a dream of opening a bakery," Stephanie said. "All it takes is $150 and 250 words."

Though rare, it's not unprecedented for business owners to offer an essay contest as a means of transferring their wealth.

Janice Sage, owner of the Center Lovell in Lovell, Maine, won the business in an essay contest in 1993. In March, Sage announced an essay contest to turn it over to its next owner.

Sara Krafft, a 30-year-old single mom working two jobs in New Mexico, is one of those people hoping to win the historic inn. She entered after a group of friends held a secret fundraiser to help her raise the $125 entrance fee.

"I took my favorite philosophy: 'Love is deeds, not words,' and wrote about how I would care for the Center Lovell Inn and its patrons through responsible, loving actions," Krafft said.

Carjacking. Man accused of killing Amy Lord attempts suicide in jail cell

Edwin Alemany, the man accused of killing Amy Lord in a carjacking, attempted suicide in his cell at the Suffolk County jail over the weekend, according to his attorney.

Alemany attempted to hang himself. The Boston Globe reported. Alemany has attempted to harm himself on other occasions, including before making his first appearance in South Boston Municipal Court in 2013.

Lord, 24, was carjacked in South Boston in 2013 and Alemany allegedly forced her to withdraw money from several ATMs before he stabbed her and dumped her body in Stony Brook Reservation in Hyde Park.

Alemany, 30, is charged with first-degree murder, kidnapping, armed carjacking, two counts of armed robbery, two counts of armed robbery while masked, armed assault with intent to rape, and stealing by confining in connection to the Wilbram native's murder.

Rat video shuts down Mattapan restaurant

Viral. The China Sea temporarily shut down after inspectors found it rife with health violations after a Facebook video of a rat running around.

A viral video of a rat in a Chinese restaurant in Mattapan has led to health inspectors shutting it down — at least for the moment.

The video was posted to Facebook a week ago showing a rat inside the China Sea, located at 1202 Blue Hill Avenue in Mattapan.

Boston Inspectional Service suspended the restaurant after an inspection on May 29. According to the report, food inspectors found more than 20 health violations that

Inspectors also found cooked egg rolls kept in a cardboard box where raw chicken had been stored. It was not immediately clear when the restaurant would reopen.

Caitlyn Jenner makes debut on cover of Vanity Fair

Caitlyn Jenner, formerly known as Bruce, has made her magazine cover debut on the July issue of Vanity Fair. Shot by famed photographer Annie Leibovitz, Caitlyn sits against a metallic background in a white single-piece bathing suit. It's a stunning debut. Caitlyn publicly announced her transition to womanhood in an emotional televised interview with Diane Sawyer, after months of media speculation. Jenner, who has been prominently featured as the patriarch on E! Entertainment's "Keeping Up with the Kardashians," will star in an E! documentary this July chronicling her new life as a woman. MATT LEE, METRO

Vanity Fair writes: "Meet Caitlyn Jenner, Vanity Fair's July cover star. Pulitzer Prize-winning contributing editor and author of 'Friday Night Lights' Buzz Bissinger, who was given unfettered access to Jenner and her family, chronicles the tensions, traumas, and courage that shaped Caitlyn into the woman you see today. Annie Leibovitz shoots the first portraits of Caitlyn, which were taken in her Malibu home."

Tweeted

"I'm so happy after such a long struggle to be living my true self. Welcome to the world Caitlyn. Can't wait for you to get to know her/me."

Senate lets NSA spy program lapse, at least for now

In addition. U.S. law enforcement and security agencies will lose authority to conduct other programs.

The legal authority for U.S. spy agencies' collection of Americans' phone records and other data expired at midnight on Sunday after the Senate failed to pass legislation extending the powers.

After debate pitting Americans' distrust of intrusive government against fears of terrorist attacks, the Senate voted to advance reform legislation that would replace the bulk phone records program revealed two years ago by former National Security Agency contractor Edward Snowden.

Sen. Debbie Stabenow and Sen. Charles Schumer / GETTY IMAGES

Although the Senate did not act in time to keep the program from expiring, the vote was at least a partial victory for President Barack Obama, who had pushed for the reform measure as a compromise addressing privacy concerns while preserving a tool to help protect the country from attack.

But final Senate passage was delayed until at least Tuesday by objections from Sen. Rand Paul, a libertarian Republican presidential hopeful who has fulminated against the NSA program as illegal and unconstitutional.

In addition, U.S. law enforcement and security agencies will lose authority to conduct other programs.

Those allow for using "roving wiretaps" aimed at terrorism suspects who use multiple disposable cell phones, permitting authorities to target "lone wolf" suspects with no connection to specific terrorist groups and making it easier to seize personal and business records of suspects and their associates.

US top court backs Muslim denied job over headscarf

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in favor of a Muslim woman who sued for discrimination after being denied a sales job at age 17 at an Abercrombie & Fitch store in Oklahoma because she wore a headscarf for religious reasons.

In an 8-1 decision in the important religious rights case, the court backed Samantha Elauf, who had been rejected under Abercrombie's sales staff "look policy" after coming to her job interview wearing the headscarf, or hijab, used by many Muslim women.

Uber targeted by Canada's largest city amid cabbie protest

Taxi drivers packed a courtroom in Canada's largest city as Toronto stated its case that the Uber ride-sharing service should be regulated, as are the traditional cabs.

Toronto is seeking an injunction to stop Uber from operating unless the San Francisco-based company agrees to comply with Toronto's demand that all Uber drivers be licensed and that the company itself obtain brokerage licenses to operate.

Outside City Hall, taxi drivers parked three-deep and beeped their horns while others moved in a slow procession through downtown, clogging much of the business district.

Let's pick names for Kim Kardashian's next baby

Kim Kardashian and Kanye West are having another baby, and it's only partially to boost ratings for "Keeping Up With the Kardashians." Obviously, this is at least a little about giving toddler North a sibling to play with. Plus, now she'll have something Blue Ivy doesn't, so there. "We are so beyond excited," Kardashian tells Glamour. "If it all went away, and I was just a mom, I would love my life." I would love that, too, actually. Can we discuss that idea further?

Now, of course, comes the tough part: predicting the baby's name. Obviously the smart money is on South (if it's a boy) or Mid (if it's a girl), but since we have a bit of time before Kim's due, I thought I'd offer up some alternative ideas for what to dub Baby No. 2 by firing up the old Random Baby Name Generator one more time. I am, if nothing else, here to help.

George Clooney changes his tune on fatherhood

George Clooney finally — finally! — addressed that whole babies question that's been plaguing him at just about every stop on his "Tomorrowland" press tour. And the verdict? He and new bride Amal Clooney are totally up for having kids. Eventually. German newspaper Bild finally got him to talk — they have ways, I'm told — asking quite directly if he and Amal were interested in starting a family. "Yes, but we're taking our time," George responded. Not to put too fine a point on it, but maybe if old Georgie had offered up this revelation prior to the film's release, "Tomorrowland" might've done better.

One lucky person gets a Furiosa Barbie

FATUGLYGEEK.TUMBLR.COM

There's enough time before the holiday shopping season for Mattel to seize on this idea, but until then, if you want a Barbie doll version of Imperator Furiosa, Charlize Theron's bad-ass "Mad Max: Fury Road" character, there's only one place to go, and that's eBay. Also, there's only one doll in existence, being auctioned off by artist Joi Weaver (@joi_the_artist), and man is it a cool-looking toy. So, as they say, how much would you pay? Bidding closes Friday, so think fast.

Daily video

DELTA, YOUTUBE

Delta's new in-flight video is basically YouTube meme whack-a-mole

So what does being Internet famous really get you? A cameo in Delta's latest supergimmicky in-flight safety video, apparently. The airline debuted the clip to much fanfare online, but I can only imagine how less web-savvy passengers head-scratchingly react to it on actual planes. A lot of the video just serves as a reminder of some of the really stupid stuff we've turned into new-media cultural icons, like Keyboard Cat, Annoying Orange and the dreaded Harlem Shake. Really, we should all be ashamed of ourselves. But I just can't stay mad at Dramatic Chipmunk. And it's nice to see the Double Rainbow Guy getting out of his cabin, at least.

The 'Fifty Shades of Grey' book you never asked for is coming Assuming you're not completely sick of all things "Fifty Shades of Grey"-related just yet, author E.L. James is eager to keep trying. James announced that she's releasing a new version of the "Twilight"-inspired best-seller later this month that retells the story from Christian Grey's point of view. So, you know, "American Psycho," but with less murder. "Christian is a complex character," James says in a statement. "And readers have always been fascinated by his desires and motivations and his troubled past. Also, as anyone who has ever been in a relationship knows, there are two sides to every story." We really should have seen this coming, honestly, since Stephenie Meyer did it with "Twilight" — retelling the story from Edward Cullen's perspective in "Midnight Sun" — and "Fifty Shades of Grey" has never shied away from how much it rips off that supernatural romance saga. I can't wait to not read it.

Cobie Smulders and Guy Pearce hit the gym

Interview. The stars of "Results" make fun of kettlebells and other fads that have taken over the fitness scene.

In the indie rom-com "Results," Cobie Smulders and Guy Pearce play fitness gurus, the former who gets involved with a slubish customer (Kevin Corrigan). They're the first big-name actors to star in a film by Andrew Bujalski, the indie wunderkind of "Funny Ha Ha" and "Computer Chess," and for all involved, it was clearly a revelatory experience, even if, for the stars, it took them to the gym — a place they know very well.

You'd both known Bujalski's work before you signed on. What was it about his films that drew you into his world, especially given that they tended to star friends?

GP: I just really liked him. I think he's got a really interesting take on the universe. I want to work with that.

CS: Watching Andrew's older stuff, I thought we'd be making stuff up a lot and playing around. Maybe because Andrew worked so hard on the script — and listen, the script was so good — there wasn't that much that needed to be tweaked.

Both of you have long experience with gyms.

GP: It's a newish world for Andrew. He said he'd put on some weight a couple years ago, so he thought he'd try to get fit and lose some weight. He thought it was a fascinating world. But it was also a new world for him. It was interesting to discuss what things have changed over the years, which he's only experiencing now.

How has gym culture changed?

GP: Well, they're fad-oriented, gyms. F—ing kettlebells are in now. Everyone is doing kettlebells now, and they all look like they're about to wrench their neck muscles. It looks horrendous. When I started going to gyms in '81 or '82, aerobics was huge. I don't see anyone doing aerobics now.

CS: No, but they're doing spin classes. I do SoulCycle a lot, and I had a friend who said, "Have you tried SoulCycle underwater?" I was like, "What are you saying to me right now?" It's like SoulCycle, but your bike and you are submerged. You're underwater and you're peddling so it's adding this resistance. I was like, "Come on." You have to constantly be changing if you're in the fitness business.

One more thing

Cobie, though it's hard to tell, you actually made this film while you were pregnant.

CS: I was full-on pregnant. I was five to six months pregnant. It was actually quite fine. I hit it at a good place in my pregnancy. I just kind of made it work. But in terms of the working part of the role, I definitely wasn't able to push myself to places I wanted to go. I just had to make sure it was all in a healthy way.

are in there somewhere, for every problem you have in your life. People come out of relationships or difficult times or they don't know where they are in life, and they get obsessed with going to the gym.

BATTLE SCENES AND NEW BFF TEAMS TAKE CENTER STAGE

A thrilling battle sequence and careful character work distinguish "Hardhome," the latest episode of "Game of Thrones."

Episode MVPs

"Game of Thrones" has had mixed success with large-scale battles. The first time it tried one, in Season 2's "Blackwater," it succeeded by focusing more on the characters involved in the fighting than on the fighting itself. However, last year's "Watchers on the Walls" featured too much fighting and not enough reasons to care about it. The battle in "Hardhome" splits the difference, delivering a concentrated dose of action and staging it very inventively. The White Walkers have been a vaguely menacing presence on the show for seasons, and seeing Jon Snow and company desperately defend against their onslaught paid off all the buildup with gusto.

Although the battle scene alone was worth the price of admission, "Hardhome" did a lot of other things well, too. This episode featured the first conversations between Daenerys Targaryen and Tyrion Lannister, two major players who have been inching their way toward a meeting all year. Episode writers David Benioff and D.B. Weiss treated these scenes with the subtlety and depth they deserved. The conversations honestly seemed to mark the beginning of a beautiful friendship rather than just coming across as fan service.

Our watch for next week begins

While the final third of "Hardhome" was given over to the battle with the White Walkers, the rest caught us up with characters whose stories will come to a head in the next two weeks. Cersei Lannister remains in a dungeon after getting arrested in "The Gift," and Lena Headey is doing a wonderful job of making us feel for this often loathsome character as she adjusts to her new surroundings. Meanwhile, Sansa Stark picked up some valuable information she could use as a bargaining chip. With only two episodes to go, "Game of Thrones" seems determined to end Season 5 on a high note.

New faces

Casting rumors for next year

Although its legitimacy remains unconfirmed, a casting call sheet for Season 6 of "Game of Thrones" recently surfaced online. Apparently, HBO is looking to cast a number of new roles, including that of "an infamous pirate ... with a touch of madness." This sounds like Euron Greyjoy, an important character from the books fans had assumed was cut. If the casting call can be believed, Euron and the storylines he brings with him will show up next year.

How your food can love you back

It can be a huge challenge to get someone, especially kids, to try a new food. What helped you branch out?

"Repetition is the key," says Dinki. "But it can be hard to eat broccoli 30 times if you absolutely hate it. What I like to do is add vegetables to dishes people already love, like pizza and enchiladas. The vegetable isn't as assertive in these cases, and people then have the opportunity to get used to the flavor of a new vegetable in a more subtle way." Another tip: "Add lots of other flavors to things you don't like," says Dinki. "Steamed broccoli is not very good, but when you char it and finely chop it with roasted garlic, sour cream and chickpeas and fold it into a taco — now we're talking!"

"Junk Food Flip" premieres tonight at 9 on Food Network. PROVIDED

MAKE HEALTHY YOUR NEW HAPPY

Nikki Dinki shares her tricks to making comfort food healthy on "Junk Food Flip."

EVA KIKIS
@thisiskikis
eva.kikis@metrcus

Not every foodie begins refining their gourmet palate before high school. Take Nikki Dinki, co-host of Food Network's new show, "Junk Food Flip." Until college, Dinki confesses to having the palate of a 2-year-old.

Growing up, she only ate three foods: cheese, bread and tomato sauce. But this also meant she mostly cooked for herself beginning at age 9, when her mother gave up trying to force her to eat what she made the rest of their family. "I would spend the last couple periods of school thinking about what I wanted for dinner," Dinki recalls. "I didn't eat much variety back then, but I was still very food-focused."

Left to her own devices, she stopped trying new things entirely — which later made life in NYC problematic.

"It was difficult to go to restaurants with new friends or to go on a date, and it was embarrassing," she says. "So I decided to change it."

Fast-forward a few years and Dinki's tastes (and skills) have grown to inspire her new show, which follows her and co-host Bobby Deen (son of Paula, so he knows all about comfort food) around the country to reimagine guilty pleasures into healthier options. But they don't just make up a recipe: After flipping dishes in popular restaurants, they then go head-to-head with the originals in a taste test, judged by the customers who love them.

We asked Dinki where we are going wrong with our favorite foods.

Deep-frying

Dinki says you'd be shocked to know how many calories frying adds: "On one episode of 'Junk Food Flip,' the dish we flipped had a sprinkle of deep-fried bacon on top. The bacon alone added 600 calories — just for the garnish! Simply pan-frying over deep-frying can save you serious calories."

Sneaky calories

"If an ingredient is going to have a lot of fat and calories, it should also be adding a lot of flavor," says Dinki. Instead of packing your tacos full of cheese, put it on top so it's the first thing to hit your tongue. "And use stronger cheeses so you don't have to use as much," she adds. And even if you think you're being good by using olive oil, remember that every tablespoon has 120 calories. If you're just using it to cook, keep it to a teaspoon, or use a cooking spray instead. "And if you love an oily tomato sauce, start with just a little olive oil and finish with a little more — the olive oil that you finish with is really potent and makes an impact," she says.

in calories that you can add as many as you want and not even count them." Top off your frozen pizza with veggies before baking or saute them separately and add them to frozen meals

Portion size

"Take a small portion of pasta — you know, the size you're 'supposed' to eat — and add vegetables to it," she says. "Vegetables are so low after they come out of the microwave. Not only will you be adding nutrition, but these smaller portions will suddenly be huge!"

Meat as the star

Dinki's approach to food is right in the title of her upcoming cookbook: "Meat on the Side." "To allow veggies to take center stage on the plate, you have to manipulate them and do things that maybe most people have never thought of before," she says. She likes to add ancho chili powder and chipotle to sweet potatoes, broccoli and spaghetti squash and "make killer tacos." And instead of coleslaw, she uses cabbage in grilled cheese sandwiches or in place of chips for nachos.

Horoscope

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20
Don't reuse ineffective methods when it comes to chasing your dreams. Share your ideas with confidence, and make sure everyone knows you have something new and special to offer.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22
Your resiliency will be tested. Keep your emotions in check in order to deal with matters. An issue that began under difficult circumstances will turn.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22
Be bold. Demonstrate your talent to your superiors. Your attention to detail will make the difference between what you offer and the services of a rival.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't listen to critics. Trying to please everyone is pointless. Some people will find fault no matter what you do or say. Get together with friends who share your ideas and ethics.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22
The insight of a casual acquaintance will provide the catalyst for a new career path. Seek out the opinions of those with experience, and educate yourself about the possibilities.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Concentrate on working alongside your allies and supporters. Don't waste time trying to convince skeptics. You and your supporters will make headway if you stick together.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will feel overwhelmed. Don't make rash decisions. Take your emotions out of the equation and assess your situation honestly. You can still succeed.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20
Someone you trusted will let you down. Rehashing the situation won't change matters; it will only postpone the inevitable. Shake off the disappointment and move on.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18
Carve out a comfortable niche for yourself and your family. You don't have to spend a lot of money. A safe environment is a refuge during unsettling times.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20
Make the truth a priority. Reneging on a promise will cause a major disruption to an important relationship. If you have been neglectful, now is the time to make amends.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20
Romance is in the stars. Your vivid imagination will be yearning for a new adventure or destination. This is the right time to go exploring for the happiness you desire.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21
You can outmaneuver the competition if you produce instead of dispute. A war of words will waste time and keep you from finalizing plans. Success will silence your critics. EUGENIA LAST

Letters to the editor

Women deserve strong female comic book characters

Re: 'Blogger should get her facts straight' (Metro, June 1)
I can understand Ms. Arroyo's confusion. As I have been collecting comics since the early '60s, I can follow her logic. Unfortunately, she is completely wrong. To start with, the Ms. Marvel referred to in the previous article is Kamala Khan, a relatively new addition to the Marvel Universe, appearing for the first time in "Captain Marvel" issue 17, Nov. 2013. The Captain Marvel in that comic had previously been called Ms. Marvel since "Marvel Super Heroes" issue 13, March 1968. Several women have had the name Captain Marvel, and the first in Marvel comics was Captain Mar-Vell, a Kree warrior.

As to the Black Widow not being popular, that is also completely wrong. She is so popular after the first "Avengers" movie, she has her own title. She first appeared as a villain in "Tales of Suspense" issue 52, April 1964. She later defected and became a hero, joining the Avengers later. The main argument with the toys is that she was the one on the motorcycle. Captain America was on one in the beginning of the movie and also in the "Avengers" and "Winter Soldier" movies. The argument is that she was the most recent one and to release a toy with him on it, set for the "Avengers 2" movie, is a slap to Black Widow. I happen to agree. Women want and should have strong characters to look up to, and here is a perfect character. She is human, flawed and looking for redemption.

Re: 'Blogger should get her facts straight' (Metro, June 1)
I just want to say thank you to letter writer June Arroyo for observing what I've been observing since this idiot was given a column. Not only does she not do her research, she rarely knows what she's talking about. She makes "girl geeks" (FYI — we just call ourselves women; we're not 12-year-olds in desperate need of a title) look bad and stupid, and quite frankly, it's embarrassing.

Bunbury becoming reliable attacker for the Revolution

MLS. Teal Bunbury and the Revs have their eyes set on another deep playoff run.

In his second full season with the Revolution, Teal Bunbury is proving to be a consistent player that head coach Jay Heaps can count on to provide both leadership and production to one of the best teams in MLS. In Sunday's rainy contest against Los Angeles at Gillette Stadium — a rematch of last season's MLS Cup won 2-1 by LA in overtime — Bunbury started at midfield in New England's temporary 4-5-1 (four defenders, five midfielders, one forward) formation.

Defender Chris Tierney and midfielder Lee Nguyen each had to sit out for the Revs after accumulating too many yellow cards in previous matches and the Revs needed someone to step up. Bunbury opened the scoring with a skillful goal in the fifth minute — New England's fastest of the season — and played the entire 90-plus minutes as the Revs (5-3-6) settled for a 2-2 tie with the Galaxy (5-4-6).

"Teal was really good tonight, he created pressure," noted Heaps.

Bunbury's goal, his third of the season, occurred after a great cross by midfielder Scott Caldwell. Bunbury was on the other side of LA's net and he ran onto the ball before one-touching it past Galaxy goalkeeper Jaime Penedo, who wasn't able to get across in time.

Bunbury is only 25 years old but is playing in his sixth MLS season after being the No. 4 overall pick in the 2010 SuperDraft by Kansas City. He was traded to Foxboro in February 2014 for New England's first-round pick in 2015 and allocation money. His father, Alex, actually played in MLS (for KC as well) and on the Canadian National Team while Teal won the Hermann Bunbury has three goals in 11 games played for the Revs this season. He scored four total goals in 31 games last season, and. He scored nine goals in 2011 as a member of Sporting Kansas City.

Do you have Vitiligo?

Brigham & Women's Hospital is currently seeking volunteers to participate in a clinical trial for adults with vitiligo. The research study will evaluate the effectiveness of Orencia® in patients with moderate to severe vitiligo who have not taken any other systemic biologic medication (drugs that work throughout the body) within the last two months.

We need participants:

- 18 years of age and older
- With moderate to severe vitiligo
- Who have not taken any other systemic biologic medication within the last two months.
- Who can attend approximately 9 clinic visits over 32 weeks.
- Are willing and able to complete subject questionnaires

Qualified participants may receive:

- Study-related evaluations and labs
- Study medication
- Compensation for participation for time and travel.

Trophy (college soccer's Heisman) in his sophomore season at the University of Akron before turning pro.

Like his New England teammates Charlie Davies and Juan Agudelo (who earned another call up on Sunday for the U.S.' upcoming friendlies at Holland and Germany), Bunbury got some U.S. National Team experience at a young age and now he's trying to work his way back into the fold under head coach Jurgen Klinsmann. A groin injury to another Revolution teammate, Jermaine Jones, could actually be a good thing in terms of Bunbury's individual game. He'll be counted on even more for New England if Jones misses a significant amount of time.

The Revs are still comfortably in second place in the East (four points behind D.C.) but they have bigger goals in mind than just a regular-season crown. To get where they want to get, Bunbury and the Revs need to be able to close.

"We have these 10-minute periods where we let games get away (LA scored both of its goals nine minutes apart in the first half)," explained Bunbury. "We need a killer instinct, meaning we put teams away and not let them think that they can stay with us."

MLB. Red Sox to engage in double-dip Wednesday

The Red Sox surely needed an off-day after Sunday's brutal walk-off loss to Texas. The baseball gods obliged as Monday's game at Fenway Park against the Twins was postponed to Wednesday (1:35 p.m., NESN) due to rain. Clay Buchholz will now pitch Tuesday's game against Minnesota (7 p.m., NESN). Eduardo Rodriguez is now slated to get the ball in Wednesday's day game and Rick Porcello will throw Wednesday night (7 p.m., NESN). Steven Wright will start on Thursday (4 p.m., NESN).

The Twins come into Fenway with the second-best record in the American League at 30-19. They've won their last two games, while the Sox have dropped three in a row.
